"THE VALLEY OF SILENT MEN" KENTUCKY HORSES WILL RACE IN CUBA

There's a new Curwood novel out—"The Valley of Silent Men"—and the mere mention of a new Curwood story these days is to bring joy to the hearts of those who like novels that deal with the great Far North in the Canadian Northwest, "God's Country"—as the boys say—which Mr. Curwood has made famous.

It is stated that more than 100,000 copies of "The Valley of Silent Men" were sold before the novel reached the shelves in the bookstores. At this rate Curwood bids fair to attain the immense sale of Mr. Harold Bell Wright.

So intense is the story, so virile the atmosphere that the reader not only reads but he actually lives the story of Sergeant Jim Kent, the best man trapper in the Royal Mounted, who died gloriously as he thought he was dying, to save a friend—and the story, too, of Marete, that "wonderful little goddess," to quote Mr. Curwood, of the "Valley of Silent Men."

"The Valley of Silent Men" is the best Curwood novel yet, better even than "The River's End," which is saying a great deal. There's a treat awaiting you in "The Valley of Silent Men" if you are a Curwood fan, and if you have not yet discovered Curwood you are due for an even greater treat.

"The Valley of Silent Men" is published by Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York, and is illustrated by Dean Cornwell.

Hall's Catarrh Medicine

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a Tonic and Blood Purifier, and acts through the blood upon the mucous surfaces of the body, thus reducing the inflammation and restoring normal conditions. All druggists. Circulars free. F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. (adv-sept)

Loving Plotters
By GENEVIEVE ULMAR

(©, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

The mother of Morton Dale entered his office, peered into his private room, found it vacant and turned her gaze upon his stenographer, Irene Blandon, with some wonderment. The latter, a handkerchief to her eyes and sobbing low, had not noticed her appearance. The sheet of paper on her typewriter bore evidence of tears.

"Why, Miss Blandon!" spoke the visitor gently, "whatever is the trouble? You are crying."

Irene lifted a woeful face to the lady. "I couldn't help it," she spoke. "You must know how things are here and I am so sorry for Mr. Dale."

"Perhaps I do not entirely know how things are here, dear," said Mrs. Dale. "Of course Morton has told me of his misfortune in trusting a client with half his capital and the man investing it unfortunately and no chance of recovering it. But Morton is young, bright and honorable, the world is all before him and it has greatly distressed me to see how hard he has taken it."

"Mr. Dale was under a severe strain before that came," announced Irene. "He put through a very creditable deal and counted on expanding his business when this loss came along. Oh, Mrs. Dale! can you not induce him to seek and find what alone can save him—an entire abandonment of business cares for a spell? He is not ill, but mentally depressed. He has lost his nerve, as the men on 'change say, and he gets gloomier and more discouraged every day. Perhaps you wonder at my feeling over him, but I came to the city knowing nobody and if I were his own sister he could not have been more kind and helpful to me. Every time I write to the family at home, I am sure they bless him for the interest he has taken in me and the good position he has given me."

"You are a sweet, dear girl," said Mrs. Dale, her own eyes dimming. "Tell me what you think we had ought to do to win him from his apathy and gloom."

"He must give up business for a time, that is sure," answered sensible, practical Irene. He has a fine, sensitive nature and he is getting thin and tired all of the time. He needs building up, and oh! if he would only consent to do down to Waltham, where I came from, and let mother and the folks look after him and think of nothing but rest and recreation, he would surely come back with renewed health and courage."

The sincerity and earnestness of the young girl charmed the anxious mother. From the suggestion Irene made grew definite plans. Morton Dale agreed to them, though with little interest in them, it seemed, and one day left for a month's vacation at Hollywood farm. It was not until he got away from the turmoil and grime of the city and the train glided along past fresh vernal scenes and the flower perfumed air came in revivingly at the open car window, that his perturbed mind began to calm down. In a gentle, politic way those two loving plotters had spent a week in winning him to their suggestion. Now, feeling how reliably Irene would attend to his interests and recalling that she was sacrificing her own vacation visit to the folks at home for his sake, a tender gratitude expanded his soul, temporarily clouded by his own selfish and exaggerated worries.

"She is like my mother—all gold!" Morton told himself, and when he arrived at Waltham he soon decided that there were others, too, of the home-spun, but heartsome Blandon family who were eligible to be quoted in the same precious metal category.

Irene's two sisters were in evidence occupying a seat in the roomy old sitting room, pictures of health and jolliness. The brother, a big-hearted fellow, always joking and laughing, hailed Morton as a bosom friend. When they reached the pleasant old-fashioned farmhouse Mrs. Blandon welcomed their guest as an own son. The guest parlor of the most enjoyable meal of weeks and slept with a smile on his lips, as through his dreaming fancies ran shadowy echoes of some joke Wilfred Blandon narrated, or a fugitive thought of the brave little helper he had left in charge of his business craft came to his mind.

Anne Boleyn's Clock.
The weights of a clock at Windsor castle bear on them "The Most Happy," and the clock is further inscribed with the motto, "Dieu et mon droit," and the letters "H. A." entwined in true-lovers' knots. This exquisitely-made clock—only four inches deep and ten inches high—was a gift from Henry VIII to Anne Boleyn on her wedding day. It was in the possession of Horace Walpole, and Queen Victoria paid $551 for when the contents of Strawberry Hill were sold in 1842.

Keep this Door Open Too—Mr. Merchant!
Would you lock one of your doors for the price of a telephone?
When your telephone is busy (with either incoming or outgoing calls) an important business-getting door of your store is closed and locked. Maybe the customer who wants to telephone you an order will wait until that door is open again—but maybe he won't!
If your present equipment is often in use, you might make a profit on another telephone or "trunk"—or on even several more; a good many merchants do.
We can list them all under the same number, using any of your lines that is idle when you are called. It will pay you to make it easy for your customers to reach you on the telephone. Think it over.
